Minutes of the Public Hearing

August 25, 2022

6:30 PM

I. Call to Order:

Chairman Shannon Whitfield called to order the Public Hearing of the Board of Commissioners held at Annex III, 201 S. Main Street, LaFayette, Georgia at 6:30 PM on August 25, 2022.

II. Attendees:

The following were present: Chairman Whitfield, Commissioner Robert Blakemore, Commissioner Mark Askew, Commissioner Brian Hart, Commissioner Robert Stultz, Legal and Policy Director David Gottlieb, Public Relations Director Joe Legge, Chief Financial Officer Greg McConnell, Board Clerk Whitney Summey, and County Clerk Rebecca Wooden. Other guests signed in at the meeting as well. Please see the attached sign in sheet.

III. Public Hearing:

- I. Chairman Whitfield gave an overview of the proposed millage rate. He said this is a partial rollback, but there are additional property tax revenues created. He explained the estimated tax increase and the differences in the incorporated and the unincorporated areas. He said there is an insurance tax credit that cities receive which factors into the millage rate difference in incorporated and unincorporated areas. He reviewed a few specifics in the five year history of the tax digest. He explained how increases in property values affect the proposal.
- II. Chief Financial Officer Greg McConnell explained the different types of revenue and expenses in the County. He said he wanted to give some insight on some of the larger expenses for the County.
- III. Gregory Parker asked what claims Walker County has over independent private property. Chairman Whitfield said there is an assessment on property in order to generate revenue to fund County operations. Gregory Parker asked if Walker County takes a claim on his private property in order to tax it. Casey Parker said their property is not commercial and the County is taxing it as commercial. Gregory Parker said private property is not taxable and he has not agreed to it being taxed. He said he does not depend on any services the County offers. Commissioner Askew asked if he drove down county roads. Gregory Parker said he pays for driving on county roads everytime he puts fuel in his tank by paying a fuel tax. Gregory Parker said business and corporations should be taxed to fund the County budget and not his private property. Chairman Whitfield thanked Mr. Parker for his comments.

IV. Commissioner Comments:

Chairman Whitfield asked the Board if they had any further comments on the proposed millage rate. There were no further comments from the Board.

Adjournment:

Commissioner Hart made a motion to adjourn the meeting, Commissioner Blakemore seconded the motion, motion carried and the meeting was adjourned at 7:56 PM.

Kemp's plan will issue $2B in property, income tax rebates

By Rebecca Grapevine
Capitol Beat News Service

ATLANTA — Gov. Brian Kemp announced Thursday, Aug. 11, he plans to issue around $2 billion in income and property tax rebates to Georgians next year — if he wins re-election in November. Record economic growth in Georgia has given the state a budget surplus and some of that money should be returned to people's pockets, Kemp said. Kemp's proposed $1 billion tax rebate would provide $250 income tax rebates to single filers, $375 rebates to single filers who are heads of household and $500 rebates to married couples filing jointly next year, Kemp said. The income tax rebate would be similar to the extra income tax rebates most Georgia taxpayers received this summer, Kemp noted. Kemp proposed an additional $1 billion in property tax rebates. This would mean Georgia homeowners would get an estimated $500 rebate to offset higher property tax bills. "This Georgia Homeowner Rebate will save an average homeowner between 15 and 25% on their local property tax bill next year," Kemp said. "For young Georgians just getting settled into their first home or parents sending their kids off to college, unforeseen jumps in property values and local tax bills only add to the uncertain times we are in," Kemp said. "This will put real money back in the pockets of hardworking Georgians."

Brian Kemp

Kemp took credit for Georgia's budget surplus, pointing to his administration's economic development successes, especially in rural parts of the state. His administration has brought in a total of $21.2 billion in investments to the Peach State over the last year, Kemp said earlier this week. A spokesperson for Democrat Stacey Abrams — who is running against Kemp for the governorship — criticized Kemp's proposals.

"Stacey Abrams has proposed giving tax relief to middle-class families and working Georgians," said Alex Floyd on behalf of the Abrams campaign. "Kemp's plan would give tax handouts to millionaires while he still refuses to expand Medicaid and lower healthcare costs for Georgians," Floyd said. "Georgians need relief today."

Dr. Gabrielle Ferran joins Pray Chiropractic office in Ringgold

From Press Release

Dr. Gabriella Ferran has joined the full-time chiropractic staff at Pray Chiropractic's Ringgold office. Ferran earned both her bachelor's degree in exercise science and her Doctor of Chiropractic degree from Life University in Marietta, Ga. Born in Puerto Rico, Ferran is fluent in both English and Spanish. Ferran's desire to become a chiropractor began when she first received chiropractic care as a teen when sidelined with volleyball injuries. The effects of that care were profound, as not only was her pain reduced but her athletic performance was enhanced, which enabled her to go on to play collegiate volleyball at Life University. Ferran's personal experience made her realize that she wanted to dedicate her career to improving other's quality of life through chiropractic. She is now a full-time chiropractor at Pray Chiropractic's Ringgold office, continuing the tradition that has made Pray Chiropractic the region's leader in chiropractic care for almost three decades. At Pray Chiropractic, Ferran treats entire families and serves patients of all ages, with an emphasis on patients with sports injuries, auto accident injuries and disc conditions. Ferran has two doodles named Benji and Pablo. When not treating patients, she enjoys walking with her dogs, trying new restaurants, working out and spending time with friends and family. Ferran is currently accepting new patients and appointments can be made by calling 706-935-7729 or via Pray Chiropractic's website at www.praychiro.com.

Almost one-fifth of Ga. women of reproductive age lack insurance

By Rebecca Grapevine
Capitol Beat News Service

ATLANTA — A new report from the Georgetown University Center for Children and Families has found that about 20% of Georgia women of childbearing age are uninsured. The rate of uninsured women between 18 and 44 years old is one of the highest in the country, putting Georgia in 46th place on a national ranking, the report said. Almost half of women of childbearing age who identify as Latina are uninsured, the report found. That's nearly double the national average. The report comes as Georgia policy makers work to address improve maternal and infant health.

In 2020, there were 24.5 maternal deaths in Georgia per 100,000 live births, slightly above the national rate. Maternal mortality rates are particularly high among Black women, who face a rate of 41 deaths per 100,000 live births, the report said. Some women and infants can get insurance through Medicaid and the Children's Health Insurance Program (CHIP), so the report also looked at how well those programs provide infant and maternal care. The information reflects the latest federal data, which is from 2019, before the pandemic. Just above three-quarters of women on Medicaid or CHIP are receiving timely prenatal care, putting Georgia in 30th place.

About two-thirds of new mothers are getting adequate postpartum care. About 12.1% of new births covered by the programs are low birthweight (under 2,500 grams), putting Georgia 48th in the state rankings. And just over two-thirds of Georgia children on Medicaid and CHIP are getting all of their recommended check-ups during the first 15 months of life, the report said, putting Georgia in 21st place. "This report not only paints a bleak picture of existing health coverage gaps for all women of reproductive age in Georgia, but also shows how the state's poor performance on maternal and infant health issues could lead to widening disparities in health," said Joan Alker, executive director of the Georgetown University Center for Children and Families. "The state's decision not to expand Medicaid continues to put the health of its mothers at risk and undermines the opportunity for Georgia's children to get a healthy start in life." Gov. Brian Kemp and other Georgia Republican leaders have remained staunchly opposed to Medicaid expansion in the state, citing its costs. Georgia is now one of 12 states that have not expanded Medicaid. "Traditional Medicaid expansion would cause approximately 200,000 people to lose the ability to purchase health insurance for free," Kemp spokeswoman Katie Byrd said. The federal government recently denied Kemp's plan to set up a private health insurance marketplace in Georgia. The governor's plan would have allowed 50,000 uninsured Georgians to purchase private insurance, Byrd said. Kemp has taken other steps to improve women's health in the state, Byrd said. The governor supported bills to expand postpartum Medicaid coverage from six months to one year following birth and create supportive housing for pregnant women and new mothers. He also added funding to the state's budget to support mothers with cardiovascular conditions, Byrd said. The state Medicaid agency recently announced it will provide additional funding to safety-net hospitals Grady Memorial and Augusta University Medical Center to improve health outcomes, Byrd said.

Abortion-rights lawyers ask state judge to temporarily block Georgia's abortion law

By Rebecca Grapevine
Capitol Beat News Service

ATLANTA — Lawyers for abortion-rights groups asked a state judge Monday, Aug. 8, to temporarily block Georgia's new abortion law. The law — which bans abortion after a fetal heartbeat can be detected — took effect in July. Initially approved by the General Assembly in 2019, it had been under legal challenge in federal courts. Last month, the 11th Circuit U.S. Court of Appeals upheld the Georgia law and put it into effect immediately. Lawyers for abortion-rights groups including Planned Parenthood Southeast and SisterSong then took their fight to state court, contending that the abortion ban violates the Georgia Constitution's right to privacy. On Monday, Aug. 8, the plaintiff lawyers asked Fulton County Superior Court Judge Robert McBurney to block the law by issuing a temporary restraining order or preliminary injunction. They argued the law was void from the moment it passed the General Assembly three years ago because it violated then-settled U.S. Supreme Court precedent about the right to an abortion. The state — represented by Solicitor General Stephen Petrany — countered that Georgia law does not require a judge to temporarily block a law before he or she has issued a decision on the case. Although the 2019 law did not necessarily fit the Supreme Court's abortion precedents at the time, the Georgia abortion law represented legislators' — and through them, Georgians' — will, Petrany said. Therefore, it was valid from the start. McBurney indicated he would issue a ruling on the request for an injunction soon. In a brief press conference after the hearing, abortion-rights advocates said Georgians have been directly harmed by the new abortion ban. "The Georgia Constitution says there is a right to privacy and that right to privacy extends to a person's body and a person's health," said Susan Lambase, a lawyer for Planned Parenthood Federation of America. "[People] either have to forcibly remain pregnant, or they have to figure out a way ... to go to some state that provides more access [to abortion]."

Broadband to get a $240M boost

By Rebecca Grapevine
Capitol Beat News Service

ATLANTA — Gov. Brian Kemp announced Friday, Aug. 12, he is investing $240 million in federal COVID relief funds in expanding Georgia's high-speed internet infrastructure. "Whether you own a small business in rural Georgia, run a farm that utilizes precision agriculture technology, or have children that need to do their homework, the expansion of high-speed internet impacts all Georgians," Kemp said. "Regardless of location, access to broadband service is essential for all communities in the Peach State to thrive. I remain committed to helping improve the lives of our citizens by closing the digital divide in our state." Many areas of the state still lack broadband access, according to a map published by the state government. The Kemp administration will have invested over $1 billion in expanding broadband access by the end of the year, the governor's statement said. The funds will be administered through a competitive grant program. Further details about applying for the new grants will be released soon.

NOTICE OF PROPERTY TAX INCREASE

The Governing Authority of Walker County, Georgia has tentatively adopted a millage rate which will require an increase in property taxes by 6.64% in the unincorporated area and 3.97% in the incorporated areas.

All concerned citizens are invited to public hearings on this tax increase to be held at the Walker County Civic Center, 10052 Hwy 27, Rock Spring, GA on August 25, 2022 at 8:00 a.m. and at Walker County Courthouse Annex III, 201 S Main St., LaFayette, GA on August 25, 2022 at 6:30 p.m.

Time and places of additional public hearings on this tax increase are at Walker County Courthouse Annex III, 201 S Main St., LaFayette, GA on September 1, 2022 at 6:30 p.m.

This tentative increase will result in a millage rate of 7.200 mills in the unincorporated area and 10.293 in the incorporated areas, an increase of 0.448 mills in the unincorporated area and 0.393 mills in the incorporated areas. Without this tentative tax increase, the millage rate will be no more than 6.752 mills in the unincorporated area and 9.900 in the incorporated areas. The proposed tax increase for a home with a fair market value of $225,000 is approximately $34.92 in the unincorporated area and $34.58 in the incorporated area and the proposed tax increase for non-homestead property with a fair market value of $175,000 is approximately $31.36 in the unincorporated area and $27.51 in the incorporated areas.

In a word: extreme

“My opponent,” fulminated the candidate, “and those who endorse him continue to focus on the extreme and unconstitutional notion that we can overturn the 2020 election.”

No, that was not said by a Democrat, but by Robin Vos, the Republican speaker of the Wisconsin legislature, who was facing, and defeating, a primary challenger endorsed by Donald Trump. Still, Vos did use the word that has become the keynote, the clarion call of the Democrats’ fall campaign: extreme.

Leftists of the Bernie Sanders stripe fantasize that this is a liberal country; it’s not, but it is not a hard-right nation, either. Our center of political gravity is close, well, to the center, perhaps tilting slightly to the right. So when Republicans pick candidates who espouse views outside the mainstream, they set themselves up for defeat.

The political world has been focusing on Kansas, where voters crushed an attempt to roll back constitutional protections for abortion rights. But that result comes in a context of outlandish lies about the 2020 election and the lingering stench of Trump’s crazed and chaotic presidency. It’s taken together that these elements give Democrats an opening to label Republicans as dangerously unsafe and unstable.

“The only thing that might save Democrats is Republicans, and they’re trying their damndest to do it,” David Axelrod, Barack Obama’s chief political adviser, told The New York Times.

The Democrats remain in deep trouble. In the latest ABC poll, 69% of voters said the economy is getting worse, and a paltry 29% think President Biden is handling inflation well. No wonder his personal approval rating is stuck below 40%.

But as Axelrod points out, Republicans keep giving the Democrats an opportunity to mitigate the effects of Biden’s unpopularity. By relitigating the 2020 election and restricting abortion rights, they shift attention away from the economy and toward issues where they are out of step with public opinion.

The campaign in Kansas is a prime example of this misguided strategy. Trump carried the state by almost 15 points, yet the referendum lost 59% to 41%. Nate Cohn of the Times estimates that nationwide, 65% of voters would reject a similar proposition. That squares with a CNN poll that reports that 63% of voters oppose the Supreme Court’s decision canceling a constitutional right to abortion.

Opponents include 7 of 10 independents and 55% of moderate Republicans — and the key word here is “moderate.” MAGA nation remains strongly behind Trump and his acolytes, but it was pragmatic voters, especially well-educated women living in the suburbs, who roared their disapproval of the Kansas initiative.

The court decision triggered an upsurge in voter registration; an estimated 70% of the newly energized voters were women, and their impact was clearly felt in places like Leavenworth County, a suburban area outside of Kansas City with an Army post and federal penitentiary. The county supported Trump by more than 20 points in 2020, but voters there rebuffed the amendment by 59.3% to 40.7%.

It wasn’t just the suburbs, however. Pro-abortion rights forces cleverly adopted the language of traditional conservatives, stressing individual rights and running ads urging voters to “say no to more government control.” That worked in places like Lyon County, a rural area that hasn’t backed a Democrat for president in half a century but voted almost 2 to 1 to retain abortion rights in the constitution.

As Kansans were expressing their mainstream impulses, Republican primary voters in Arizona doubled down on their self-destructive tendencies, nominating hard-core election deniers and anti-abortion militants for four statewide offices, including governor and senator.

Democrats still seem doomed to lose the House, but the Senate is another matter. Republican-controlled state legislatures over many years have produced maps that protect many GOP House seats, but since Senate races are statewide, they cannot be gerrymandered, and the playing field is more level.

Arizona is only one of several states — add Pennsylvania, Georgia, Ohio, North Carolina and Nevada — where Republicans have nominated weak Senate candidates who can be branded as in over their heads or outside the lines. That’s why the website FiveThirtyEight now makes Democrats a slight favorite to control the Senate, and that would be a critical outcome.

Sure, Biden’s legislative agenda would be stalled by a Republican-controlled House, but the most lasting legacy of any president is often judicial appointments. As long as Democrats retain the Senate, Biden could use his next two years to stack the federal bench with progressive appointments. If that happens, extreme Republicans will bear much of the blame.

Searching for the right William Malone

People drop “off the grid,” just vanish.

There are a few in my family. Some were not that far off the grid, really.

The first was my father’s distant relative, Parker Merimuth Bomar, who was last found in Douglas County, Georgia, in 1900 and a member of the wide Bomar tribe.

His great-grandfather, Armstead Bomar, moved from South

Carolina to what was Campbell County, Georgia, as soon as land was available.

Parker, one of nine kids, was the son of Elisha Pinkney “Pink” Bomar and was sort of his own relative by marrying a cousin. There were a number of “Pinks” in the family, including Parker’s own first-born child.

Before there were census records as handy as your computer, my mother did as much of a search as was possible in those days and couldn’t come up with anything useful. She gave up.

At the time my family lived in Mt. Vernon, Georgia, and when Parker M. Bomar’s family history finally fell into my lap, his descendants were living 5 miles away in Glennwood and had been there for several generations.

They were related to every established family in Wheeler County.

That son, Elisha Pickney Bomar, became a physician and was gunned down on the street of Lyons in 1918. The father and two sons who did the deed in front of witnesses bounced around the system but eventually walked.

I’d love to read the transcript of that trial in its various forms but doubt it still exists.

The Bomars and the Malones were connected to the same people but were not related. That’s a shame because the second individual on the list was William L. Malone and his sister Missouri Malone.

William, born in 1848, and Missouri, born in 1851, were the children of John W. and Caroline Little Malone of Paulding County. John did have a taste for good (and bad) whiskey, according to those who cleaned up after him following his death.

John and Caroline married in 1848 and that is about the last we see of them; however, in Caroline’s father’s will, written May 29, 1855, he mentions that his daughter,

Caroline, was dead and the grandchildren living.

William and Missouri lived with their maternal aunt and her husband, Ephriam Pray, who at that time was William’s legal guardian and continued as such as late as 1869.

Pray was a civil engineer and it is unlikely that the Malone children escaped without a deep home-schooled education.

William is not mentioned in Pray’s will published in 1893.

The world was littered with males named William Malone born in Georgia in 1849, but none of them are ripe.

One with nearly the right taste lived in Camp County, Texas. William appears in the 1880 census with his sister living in the house but her name was given as “Sarah.” So, what’s up with William Malone?
